'Always Admired'

Editor:

I congratulate the author on the brilliant piece of sociopolitical commentary in this week's issue of the North Coast Journal ("FAQs About Your Changing Body," Aug. 31).

I've always admired her writing for both style and content, and typically read everything the NCJ publishes from her, even the articles on topics about which I have only nominal interest (like fancy restaurants, where I never expect to dine), but this time I felt compelled to write in praise of her work. Well done Jennifer Fumiko Cahill and NCJ!

Pension Problems

Editor:

Patrick Cloney's guest column ("Pension Debt is Devouring Local Services," Aug. 31) effectively addresses the threat to our safety (police, roads) quality of life (health care, social services) and even our county's fundamental economic viability.

I served on the 2016-2017 civil grand jury, where we dealt with unfunded pension liability and how it could "Un-Fund Our Future." At that time, the liability stood at $232 million, representing twice our annual fund revenues of $118 million.

Mr. Cloney reports that by early 2021, pension liability had grown to $330 million, and that 32 percent of Humboldt County's payroll costs were for pension obligations, and expected to increase by $17 million per year. Now, in 2023, he writes that "Humboldt County has a $17 million budget deficit that's projected to grow."

That's a lot of rotten roads un-fixed, abused children un-cared for, property vandalism and speeding traffic un-policed, housing un-subsidized, waste un-dumped. A depressing yet incomplete picture of our decaying community infrastructure.

Mr. Cloney describes a viable plan — will he be heard? Will we all get behind his proposal to fund our future?

Barbara Madaras, Eureka

Editor:

Patrick Cloney has done us all a great service by doing diligent research and putting hard numbers on the local public sector pension crisis. We need more police, firefighters, road maintenance and other important government workers but we can't afford to hire them because of the amount we are paying to retired workers. Humboldt County spends just a whisker short of one-third of its payroll costs on pensions — think of that, one third.

Think of it this way: Every pothole is a pension payment.

David Callow, Glendale

Editor:

Patrick Cloney's warning that "Pension Debt is Devouring Local Services" provides compelling reasons for establishing long-overdue PDSIRs, (Pension Debt Service Impact Reports).

Far more challenging is addressing public officials' policies and practices supporting developments with destructive, long-term economic, environmental and social impacts at the core of diminishing public services.

For example, a generation of top public health officials, law enforcement and elected representatives spent millions chasing the homeless from bush to bush while simultaneously permitting "moderate and above" priced subdivisions to far-exceed Humboldt County's own Regional Housing Needs Assessments, culminating today in the third looming housing collapse and bailout in just 40 years. Each collapse condemns more local families to bankruptcy, foreclosure and desperation, decreasing sales tax revenues and increasing demand for social services.

Adding to social service demand is FEMA's recent denial of earthquake assistance because 90 Rio Del homes do not meet the monetary damage threshold of 90 Malibu homes ("Forgotten in Rio Dell," Aug. 31); or, HUD's sweetheart deals enriching banks, developers and landowners with "affordable housing" projects that soon revert to market-rates, worsening the housing crisis.

In California alone, HUD-secured "private financing" totals $7.7 billion, ($168 billion nationwide), to build, expand services or refinance just 71,000 units in exclusive senior communities, many charging $250,000 minimum entry fees. Meanwhile, 3 million California seniors over 65 lack financial resources for basic necessities.

"Private financing" includes public pension funds, 401Ks, IRAs, savings and checking accounts. Eighty-four percent of banks' annual $11 billion in overdraft fees are paid by 9 percent of its poorest customers.

Late Summer

Yellow leaves litter our camp in under the pepperwoods.
 Dust rests atop the meadow's tinder-dry grasses.
 Fine silt rises with each flip-flop-clad footstep down to the river.
 Dwindling flow lengthens cobblestone's mossy beards.
 By late afternoon, sunlight is half-hearted.
 Wind moves upriver.
 Kids, playing in the deep pool, quiet.
 Preschoolers shiver, towels wrapped around shoulders.
 Parents pack up to leave.
 Still the bear comes down into the clearing at twilight, scrambles up leathery, abandoned tree for summer's last sweet apple.
 We, too, come out. We sit in the clearing and watch stars, breathing the last tang of dry pepperwood.

California's Wildfire Smoke and the Climate Crisis: Four Things to Know

By Alejandro Lazo/CalMatters
newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

Wildfires and climate change are locked in a vicious circle: Fires worsen climate change, and climate change worsens fires.

Scientists, including those at the World Resources Institute, have been increasingly sounding the alarm about this feedback loop, warning that fires don't burn in isolation — they produce greenhouse gases that, in turn, create warmer and drier conditions that ignite more frequent and intense fires.

Last week, wildfire smoke prompted another round of unhealthy air quality in California. Fires in Oregon and Humboldt and Del Norte counties sent smoke into Sacramento and the San Francisco Bay Area. And it's a global nightmare: This summer, world temperatures hit an all-time high, the worst U.S. wildfire in more than a century devastated Maui, a deadly fire in Greece was declared Europe's largest ever and swaths of the Midwest and Northeast have been blanketed by smoke from Canada's forest fires.

As California's most intense wildfire months approach, the volume of greenhouse gases they emit is expected to grow.

A bill by Assemblymember Bill Essayli, a Republican from Riverside, introduced this year would have required the state to count wildfire emissions in its efforts to reduce statewide greenhouse gases. But the bill didn't get far: It was defeated in committee.

Here are answers to some of the key questions raised by the symbiotic relationship between wildfires and climate change:

What's happening to carbon emissions as wildfires worsen?

Scientists around the world are trying to quantify just how much wildfires contribute to climate change.

Last year, California wildfires sent an estimated 9 million metric tons of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere, according to California Air Resources Board estimates. That's equivalent to the emissions of about 1.9 million cars in a year.

In 2020, California's wildfires were its second-largest source of greenhouse gases, after transportation, according to a study published last year. The researchers from University of California at Los Angeles and the University of Chicago concluded that the 2020 wildfires increased overall emissions by about 30 percent.

When forests burn, carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases are released into the air. It's considered part of a natural cycle, with plants absorbing and then releasing the chemicals into the air over time. But experts say the increasing frequency of fires might be throwing this cycle out of balance.

Emissions this year from Canada's forests have shattered records, according to the European Union's Copernicus Atmosphere Monitoring Service. Last year, carbon dioxide from boreal forests — the world's northernmost forests, which span vast swaths of Canada and Alaska — hit a record high, University of California at Irvine researchers reported in the journal Science.

Fires in these northern latitudes are of deep concern to researchers, as those forests historically were too cold to experience significant burns. They are incredibly dense and emit methane from the permafrost that lies beneath them.

"These are forests that haven't burned, not just in decades but probably centuries," said Char Miller, an environmental professor at Pomona College in Claremont. "Where does that carbon go? It goes up into the atmosphere, it circles all around the globe, it's affecting all of us. It's both symbolic and I think really significant. The coldest part of the planet is also exploding in fire."

In addition, wildfires emit methane, which is a much more potent greenhouse gas than carbon dioxide, according to a study published earlier this summer.

Will wildfire smoke derail the state's climate goals?

Researchers are increasingly calling attention to how forest fires might be eroding the state's climate goals, with UCLA scientists describing the state's efforts as "up in smoke."

Michael Jerrett, a professor at the UCLA Fielding School of Public Health, said nearly two decades worth of emission reductions from power plants were threatened by the 2020 fires, which included some of California's largest and most destructive fires.

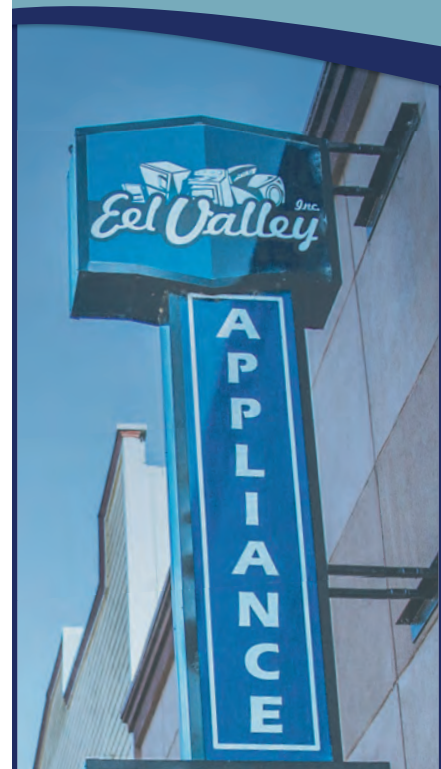

"Essentially, the positive impact of all that hard work over almost two decades is at risk of being swept aside by the smoke produced in a single year of record-breaking wildfires," Jerrett said in a statement.

Some experts say carbon emissions from wildfires are not much of a concern — that the carbon captured by trees, brush and grasses already existed in the atmosphere so its release during fires is part of a natural cycle. As a result, they say, those emissions shouldn't be considered net contributors to climate change.

"These are distractions from the real issue which is that we need to generate a lot more renewable energy to displace our use of fossil fuels," Anthony Wexler, director of the Air Quality Research Center at University of California at Davis, wrote to CalMatters in an email.

On the other hand, some experts say carbon is carbon — and that it all contributes to climate change. Jerrett and the other authors of the UCLA report said wildfire emissions should be a bigger part of California's climate policy.

For its part, the California Air Resources Board estimates emissions from wildfires, but it doesn't count them against greenhouse gas targets for 2030. The targets are based only on gases produced by industries, energy, transportation and other human sources.

Last year, Gov. Gavin Newsom signed into law a requirement that the state achieve net-zero emissions as quickly as possible, no later than 2045. That mandate means the state will have to ultimately consider the roles of natural and working lands, said David Clegern, an air board spokesman. However, some wildfires are "part of the natural cycle and should not count against targets," Clegern wrote in an email.

Clegern said "it's difficult to know" how much carbon from wildfires "might reduce the effectiveness of the state's climate programs."

"That's because to a certain extent wildfire smoke is part of a natural carbon cycle ... We cannot yet draw a bright line to accurately measure that impact," he said.

Instead, he said scaling back fossil fuels has to be California's priority.

"California is working on reducing wildfire in an all-hands-on-deck manner, but we won't really fix the problem until we quit pumping more fossil fuel emissions into the atmosphere," Clegern said.

How does the state plan to deal with carbon from fires?

State officials say restoring the health of forests and taking steps to make sure they are more resilient to fires will result in fewer wildfires and fewer climate-changing emissions.

Air board models project that natural and working lands — forests, rangelands, urban green spaces, wetlands and farms — will be a net source of emissions through 2045, while at the same time these lands will experience a decrease in the trees, shrubbery, soil and other natural features that naturally sequester carbon.

That's why the proper management of these undeveloped lands will be important in the coming two decades. More than half of California's forestland is managed by the federal government, and the Newsom administration announced in 2021 it was working with the Biden administration to better manage forests and build fire resilience.

"These lands can be part of the climate solution, but we need to increase our efforts to reduce their emissions and improve their ability to store carbon into the future," Clegern said.

Burning forests might be complicating the state's climate goals in other ways, too. California's carbon offset market has been threatened by out-of-state wildfires, the online publication Grist reported, because the state awards credits to companies that maintain forests elsewhere to store carbon.

What about the impact on smog and soot?

Wildfire smoke is toxic, containing substances such as carbon monoxide and benzene, a carcinogen. Smoke's tiny particles of soot are considered its most hazardous ingredient, since they can enter airways, lodge in lungs and trigger asthma or heart attacks. Local air quality districts regularly send out warnings in California when wildfires spread smoke, sometimes hundreds of miles from the fires.

Smoke may be negating some of California's hard-fought clean-air gains. A report last year by the Energy Policy Institute of Chicago found that some California counties were more polluted than they were in 1970. In 2020, more than half of California counties experienced their worst air pollution since 1998, according to the report.

California's air quality agencies do not have to consider wildfire smoke when they outline plans to attain health standards for air pollutants, such as fine particles and ozone. That's because fires are considered "exceptional events" under the federal Clean Air Act.

"Even though the frequency of wildfires is increasing, we have no reason to believe that (U.S.) EPA will change how wildfire emissions are treated under the exceptional events process," Clegern said.

Meanwhile, concern about the impact of smoke on communities is growing. Nitrogen oxides, which form smog, appear to be increasing in rural areas — largely due to wildfires, according to a recent UC Davis study.

"If you go to these remote forests — which are predominantly in the north and the Sierras in the south — what you find is that there's this large increase," said study co-author Ian Faloona, a UC Davis bio-micro-meteorologist. ●

Hope

By Jere Bob Bowden
newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

Each day, it seems, we are made aware of startling new crises in our environment — Mesopotamia's Fertile Crescent, the “Cradle of Civilization,” has turned, ironically, to dust; the oceans' depths are garbage dumps; the discovery that nano plastics are truly everywhere, found even in meconium — a newborn baby's first bowel movement. Each new category of calamity and shock is a piece of a giant puzzle coming inexorably together. And the picture on the lid of this puzzle's box is not pleasant.

I cannot comprehend what is happening.

In this dilemma, I grapple with use of language, how it can bring solace or despair. The use of the word “hope,” for example. I find myself now flinching when I hear the word used overly optimistically.

It's this: It's quite easy nowadays to believe our species is, perhaps, a failure of evolution. We've taken more from Earth than we have ever given back. It's easy to contemplate that we, perhaps, are 50 years or more too late to stop the processes we ourselves set in motion long ago, processes rampantly destroying ecosystems everywhere. It's very easy — now — to think that we are no longer in charge of our self-created chaos.

I've always held the comforting hope that nature could recover from homo sapiens' negative impact on this living planet. A hope that when we've disappeared, Earth would be allowed — in time — to heal itself and once again flourish abundantly.

But that hope has now been darkened by contemplating one of modern humankind's most stunning (and stupid) technological achievements. In our collective consciousness, we seem to have let simmer on an almost forgotten back burner the high probability of nuclear suicide.

In the foreground of my thinking now sits the Ultimate Climate Grief — the likelihood of instantaneous annihilation of everything — the coup de grace in our long assault on Earth. There is no “Stop” button.

Not unlike the asteroid that took away the dinosaurs, we are powerful, sufficiently so to leave a planet's life maimed and wounded for millions and millions of years. That we have arrived at such a capability reveals the enormity of our ignorance. We are a carefree species, wandering the universe, destroying things.

So where is hope? Why did I flinch? If it's true we have arrived at a time in history when a word like “hope” is irrelevant, then what is left to do?

This: We shall see each other. We shall see and understand that all we've ever known is an ancient present moment — here, where we are.

Thus we shall do our daily routines, tend our gardens, do our work, make our music and our art, live our lives in gratitude for every breath. And we shall see each other.

And we shall love. We shall love ourselves, our partners and our friends. We shall love those whom we do not yet know.

We shall love so that we may stay sane, sane enough to be of use to someone suffering in distress — anyone. Our loving will be a safe haven in the chaos we all may soon experience. And lovinkindness shall be the antidote against much sorrow and much grief.

That is what is left to do.

Jere Bob Bowden lives in Ferndale.

Crowley Questions Mount for Harbor District

Pressure is mounting on the Humboldt Bay Harbor, Recreation and Conservation District to reconsider its relationship with Crowley Maritime, its partner in the rush to develop a marine terminal to serve the proposed offshore wind farm, or at least to hold off on consummating the partnership.

The first official salvo came Aug. 20 in the form of an op-ed Yurok Tribal Chair Joseph James published in a local paper calling on the district to “reconsider” its exclusive right to negotiate agreement with the international maritime industry giant due to a “rotten company culture” evidenced by two federal lawsuits. The latest, meanwhile, hit Aug. 31, with news that Crowley Wind Services Vice President Jeff Andreini had left the company amid sexual harassment allegations with ties to Humboldt County, as first reported by the Lost Coast Outpost.

Harbor District Executive Director Larry Oetker released a letter in response to the Outpost’s reporting about Andreini’s departure stating that the district takes allegations of sexual harassment “very seriously and holds the safety and well-being of our community paramount.” But the letter did not mention Crowley — much less Andreini — by name or denote any next steps, leaving it unclear exactly where things go from here. What does seem clear, however, is that questions about Crowley’s handling of sexual assault and harassment allegations and what the company’s culture mean for its future in a region with the highest rates of missing and murdered indigenous people in the country are poised to continue.

Back in October, as the federal government prepared to auction off two leases to build deep-sea offshore wind farms 20 miles off Humboldt’s coast, the harbor district announced it had entered into an exclusive right to negotiate with Crowley Wind Services, a subsidiary of the multinational maritime giant and Department of Defense contractor, to develop the old pulp mill site on the Samoa Peninsula into a state of the art heavy lift marine terminal. Crowley, it seemed, was drawn to what could be more than a $1 billion project to service the nascent industry, while Humboldt officials were drawn to the company’s track record of completing big projects and industry expertise.

But as James noted in his My Word column published in the Times-Standard, Crowley faces mounting legal trouble in the form of a pair of federal sex trafficking lawsuits. The suits, brought by a woman under the pseudonym of Jane Doe and Vanessa Treminio, both former Crowley employees, allege their boss, Juan Emilio Blanco, engaged in a pattern of harassing behavior the company ignored before he allegedly sexually assaulted Jane Doe and raped Treminio, both in 2018.

Jane Doe alleges she had voiced concerns about Blanco’s behavior to company officials, who’d also learned of Treminio’s rape allegation, in the months leading up to a scheduled trip with her boss to the U.S. in January of 2018 but the company failed to act and Blanco allegedly attacked her during the trip. In her lawsuit, Treminio alleges that she was travelling with Blanco on business in November of 2017 when he fraudulently obtained a key to her room from the hotel’s front desk, used it to access her room and raped her, holding his hand over her mouth to keep her from screaming.

An attorney representing both women has said a former Crowley vice president admitted in sworn depositions in the case that he knew of Treminio’s rape allegation and did nothing to investigate it or report it to anyone else at the company.

The sex trafficking allegation centers on the claim that the company forced the woman to travel with Blanco, who was a “known predator” within the company.

Blanco, through his lawyer, has denied all the allegations and declined to comment publicly on the lawsuits. Crowley reportedly fired him in 2018, according to the lawsuits.

A spokesperson for Crowley has said the company has a zero tolerance policy toward sexual misconduct and is committed to creating a “safe and respectful work environment” but deemed the sex trafficking allegation “false and without merit.”

Despite the denials, the allegations have struck a chord on the North Coast, including among Native communities that for years have been working to raise awareness — and resources to combat — the epidemic of missing and murdered indigenous people. With the prospect of an industrialization on the county’s horizon that might include an influx of work crews, which local tribes contend brings an increased risk of exploitation and trafficking of Native women and girls.

In his My Word, James called on the harbor district to hold a transparent “screening and selection” process for a port developer that focuses specifically on MMIP and sex trafficking protection that includes a “robust evaluation of the human rights record of each applicant.” The tribe, James wrote, does not believe Crowley Wind Services would pass the test.

Following James letter, the CORE Hub, a new community organization under the umbrella of the Humboldt Area Foundation with the mission of solving the climate emergency while ensuring benefits accrue to underrepresented and marginalized communities to the greatest extent possible, offered its first formal input to the district’s port project. On Aug. 25, the hub sent a letter signed by 16 people, including tribal officials, leaders of environmental groups and other community organizations, commenting on the district’s notice that it was beginning the environmental review process for the project.

One of the CORE Hub’s primary concerns is that it appears the district may enter into a binding contract with Crowley before completing its environmental impact report for the project. It is crucial, the group wrote, that the district work to protect Native communities and not finalize its agreement with Crowley until the environmental review analyzes the project’s potential impacts and the measures needed to mitigate them.

It was amid this background that the Lost Coast Outpost published its bombshell report last week that Andreini, a face of the company’s efforts in Humboldt, had parted ways with Crowley amid allegations of inappropriate conduct.

According to correspondences the Outpost obtained through a public records act request, Redwood Coast Energy Authority Executive Director Matthew Marshall brought concerns to the company’s attention Aug. 22, saying Andreini had sexually harassed a subordinate employee at a bar during an industry conference in Sacramento in May, and that Marshall said Andreini’s behavior was so egregious that Marshall himself intervened.

“I’m disappointed to have to share this troubling information with you, but after speaking with numerous local women subsequent to the above incident my impression was that this behavior was not an untypical or one-off situation so I would feel remiss in not escalating the matter,” Marshall wrote, according to the Outpost’s reporting.

Crowley Chief People Officer Megan Davidson reportedly responded by thanking Marshall for bringing the issue forward, saying the company had not been aware of the incident when it happened but has since been “appraised of the situation and are handling the matter.” Within nine days, Andreini was no longer with the company, though the exact nature of his departure remains unclear after three years and eight months with Crowley.

Neither Andreini nor Marshall immediately responded to Journal inquiries for this story.

Trial by Fire

After a series of disasters,
Humboldt's response infrastructure mobilizes
to help its neighbors

By Thadeus Greenson

To say it's been a trial by fire undersells it. After all, there have also been earthquakes, bomb cyclones, near-hurricane force winds and that Snowmageddon event in February. Before all those, there were the public safety power shutoffs of 2019 and then the COVID-19 pandemic.

"It's been nonstop," says Andrew Bogar, the disaster program manager for the American Red Cross in Humboldt, Del Norte and Trinity counties. "We're starting to see disasters happen with much more frequency and they're becoming much more complicated. And on top of that, we have to account for where the economy is. We're realizing that before the disaster even happens, a lot of communities are in very vulnerable positions. And you put a disaster on top of that, and there's a lot of compounding concerns."

The barrage of disasters that have battered the North Coast in recent years have tested a region that has long prided itself on resilience. But more importantly, they have forced a network of nonprofits, volunteers and agencies to fine-tune their disaster responses through collaboration and repetition to the point they've forged a kind muscle memory that allows multi-pronged responses that would have been impossible just a few years ago.

Perhaps nowhere has this been more visible in recent weeks than in Del Norte County, where a series of 150 lightning strikes on Aug. 15 have grown into the largest active forest fire in the nation, spanning 85,501 acres with 19 percent containment. As the fires threatened the town of Gasquet and forced the closure of Highway 199 into Oregon, they also crept within a quarter-mile of high-powered electrical transmission lines, forcing the utility company Pacific Power to de-energize them, cutting power off entirely to the communities of Crescent City and Smith River, as well as Pelican Bay State Prison, with little warning.

With hundreds evacuated from their homes and thousands without power in a city inundated with wildfire smoke, the situation was dire. And it didn't come in a vacuum, either. As the flames spread along the Smith River, lightning strikes also sparked fires near Hoopa and Orleans, and Tropical Storm Hilary made landfall in Baja California, moving north.

Undaunted, a network of local nonprofits, businesses and agencies banded together to get help where it was needed, knowing that beyond fire crews, state and federal resources would be limited. In Del Norte County, the school district was on the frontlines.

Del Norte County Unified School District Superintendent Jeff Harris says most of his staff was "off calendar," meaning they hadn't yet returned from summer break for the scheduled Aug. 28 start of the school year. Nonetheless, they leapt into action on a number of fronts, using the district's infrastructure to help where it could.

The district sent a couple of school buses to Gasquet to help with evacuation efforts there, Harris says, while it also opened its sizeable fuel reserves to first responders. When the power shutoff knocked the county's emergency operations center offline, Harris says the district's information technology specialist was deployed to help, noting that the district also opened a free WiFi hotspot in the high school parking lot to allow residents — most of whom didn't have cell service — to contact loved ones.

The Red Cross, meanwhile, set up a shelter at the Del Norte County Fairgrounds on Aug. 17, primarily staffed by volunteers, to welcome residents of evacuated areas, as well as their livestock and domestic animals.

When power was cut to the city, Bogar says the Red Cross began offering its emergency meal kits to the larger community, offering food "that didn't require power or heat to eat" while planning with the school district for a more robust effort.

Harris says his district's nutrition services program staff was ready to jump into action, knowing a community already prone to food insecurity faced would be in dire need. And the district was in a good position to help, Harris says, noting that, accustomed to road closures and other supply-chain issues, it had invested heavily in freezer, refrigerator and storage space and had "a little bit of a stockpile."

So, Harris says staff committed to not just providing daily hot meals for the more than 130 people staying at the Red Cross shelter and first responders, but also to feeding anyone who wanted a meal. Through a network of contacts, distribution sites were set up throughout the city, with thousands of meals served.

And when wildfire smoke became so thick the air was deemed unhealthy to breathe, Harris says the district tapped into its supply of N-95 masks and began distributing them to the community, too.

Down in Humboldt County, a handful of organizations formed in recent years also sprang into action.

The Humboldt Community Organizations Active in Disaster (Humboldt COAD), an organization that aims to increase cooperation, communication and coordination between nonprofits, tribal governments, faith-based organizations, volunteer groups, businesses and governments, began coordinating efforts. First mobilized for the earthquake that rocked the Eel River Valley with devastating impacts to Rio Dell in December, the Humboldt COAD began coordinating efforts.

"That partnership and that collaboration has made this fire season so much more collaborative," says Jessica Gregorio, president of Pay it Forward Humboldt, a nonprofit that has been on the front lines of local disaster response since its inception several years ago. "I feel like we are all better supporting each other."

For example, when Bogar put out a call to the Humboldt COAD that the shelter needed towels and toiletries for community members looking to clean up, as well as pillows for evacuees, that message got to Gregorio. In short order, carloads of new towels and pillows from Costco were headed north, driven by a Pay it Forward volunteer.

"Pay it Forward Humboldt has been in the thick of it right alongside us," Bogar says. "We wouldn't be able to do it without them."

Some of the items seem small but can make a big impact, Bogar says, pointing to pillows as an example. They're not something most people think to grab when being evacuated and the Red Cross doesn't provide them, but on day two, three or four in a shelter, "those things make a huge difference.”

Gregorio agrees, saying those types of things matter.

“To receive something that’s brand new, just for you, that you get to lay your head on, it’s deeper than just a pillow,” she says.

Bogar says Pay it Forward — which Gregorio says has no paid employees and is run by herself and two other volunteers — was also crucial in an effort to help the Karuk Tribe evacuate regalia and cultural items from fire danger in the Orleans area, quickly getting clean totes on site to be loaded up and driven to safety. The non-profit has also been collecting box fans and air filters to be crafted into make-shift air purifiers to be sent to the Orleans area, and recently posted on social media that it delivered 900 pairs of socks to Del Norte area resource centers.

“But it wouldn’t be fire season if I wasn’t exhausted.”

Another recently minted local collaboration has also come forward to play an integral role in getting help to our neighbors in Del Norte.

The Harvest Hub, a project of the North Coast Growers Association, works to connect local farmers with wholesale buyers, like schools, Food for People and local restaurants, says Megan Kenny, its director (and co-chair of Humboldt COAD). Last week, the hub worked closely with Pay it Forward, Humboldt Made and the COAD to get donated potatoes, summer squash, tomatoes and melon from local farmers to the Family Resource Center of the Redwoods in Crescent City.

“Thanks to the planning phase leading up to the launch of the Harvest Hub, I

What's Good

From salsas to sushi in Eureka

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill
jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

Belly Up to the Salsa Bar

The revolving-door that is the spot on Eureka's Fifth Street that formerly housed Los Sinaloenses and its marvelous white menudo occupied has flipped again. Alfa Torres and her husband Bosacio Villagrana have opened their first restaurant, Paco's Tacos Taqueria (1134 Fifth St., Eureka) there, bringing big flavor in the form of its salsa bar. A Southern California standard, the array of self-serve salsas has thus far eluded us on the North Coast, and the couple weren't finding the level of spice they wanted. "It's something different in Humboldt; no one has it," says Torres.

Salsa aficionados, your moment has arrived. Lift the salsa bar's stainless steel lid and reveal a dozen options, from dark and oily to bright and creamy. On a recent visit, they included: freshly made chipotle, verde, habanero, pico de gallo, chile de aceite, roja, chile de arbol and guacamole salsas, fresh lime and habanero slices, sliced pepperoncini and pickled jalapeño. Somewhere in that field is the tang and heat you have been looking for, the oily chile de aceite — spiked with chile japones and chile de arbol — and the habanero being closest to the top of the Scoville chart.

If molotes ($11) are hiding in the corners of other Humboldt menus, they've escaped our notice. There are meat options, but cheese is the move, warm and stretchy under a fried shell of corn and flour dough. "I used to eat them when I was little," says Torres, who is originally from Guerrero, Mexico, but came to Humboldt at the age of 15. "I loved those since I was little ... and I wanted to make it here." The trio of ovals topped with shredded lettuce, crumbles of cotija cheese and crema come with a side of soupy refried bean dip, and make for a more than substantial appetizer. They're also fine foundation snacks with which to further explore that salsa bar.

The costillitas ($16) are a stronger statement of flavor — pork rib chunks stewed in a deep red sauce worth scooping up with the accompanying soft, salty, broad corn tortillas. The color comes from dried chile California and the little bit of heat is from chile de arbol. The rice and mild, creamy refried beans are a fine accompaniment to the juicy pork that's easily coaxed off the bone.

And if you've been dreaming about the tacos you ate at a local wedding or quinceañera, good news: The restaurant's namesake Paco Escobar, sought after caterer for parties around the county, is in the kitchen with Torres.

Sushi and Pizza

Other shifts in the restaurant landscape continue. Restaurateur Joe Tan of Nori and Overtime Eatery and Game is starting and restarting two projects in Eureka. He's mapping out a floorplan for the rooftop space in the newly built structure at Second and E streets, a 1,400-square foot space with a patio and room for eight to 10 tables inside. There, he hopes to run a tight ship, focused on sushi and sake, as was his original plan for Nori, which is undergoing a menu overhaul. The yet unnamed rooftop sushi restaurant would also be less sprawling in both menu and footprint than Curry Leaf. Big restaurants, he says, "are too much overhead," and he's looking to sell the pan-Asian spot at 2335 Fourth St. in Eureka.

Over on Seventh Street at the former Angelo's Pizza, Overtime Eatery and Game has been closed since the attached Brett's Pizzeria shut down June 30, dashing the dreams of both Detroit and Chicago pizza aficionados. "I don't know how to make pizza," Tan says with a laugh, and he's not ready to pick up a new skillset. "Right now [I'm] just too busy for my other two restaurants." So, he's on the hunt for someone to move into the newly spruced up pizza kitchen and run their own shop out of it. Those missing the Midwestern style of Brett's will have to light a candle and hope whoever takes it over has deep pans.

The chaotic "Burn Pile" by Bachrun LoMele.

Truth Units

Bachrun LoMele's Burn Pile/The Andromeda Mirage at the Morris Graves

By Gabrielle Gopinath
artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

Working for the past 15 years on the site of the former Synanon cult compound in the Sierra Nevada foothills, Bachrun LoMele has built his art practice into a self-perpetuating exploration of the vexed notion of personal truth. The artist solicits anonymous volunteers to record what they believe to be true statements in privacy. He then randomizes and rearranges those "truth units" before returning the reconstructed utterances to an audience in suggestive material form.

In LoMele's exhibition on view at the Morris Graves Museum of Art Sept. 2 through Oct. 15, a series of wall-mounted sculptures titled "Broken Words" frame remnant elements of signage from the walls of an abandoned Muslim elementary school once operated at the site of LoMele's studio by members of the Baladullah cult. Wall-mounted sculptures from another series, "The Understory," replicate objects of decor that would not be out of place in a middle-class home, school or small business: There are forms reminiscent of pallets, salvers, picture frames and a lectern. The central installation "Burn Pile" appears to be a haphazardly assembled jumble containing scrap lumber, industrial track lighting strips, deconstructed sections of staircase and LED channels crawling with messages in red lettering. All these materials are shoved high against the space's back wall, like a pyramid of waste bulldozed by a FEMA cleanup crew.

Faux wood paneling and fussy decorative contours conjure a small-town, cracker-barrel Americana, familiar to anyone who's ever stopped at a rural antiques mall. But these objects are post-use and the vision they sustained has been deconstructed. "Burn Pile" evokes the past-tense images whose production accompanies the quickening drumbeat of natural disasters on the nightly news. Similar piles appear with ever-increasing regularity on our screens after the passage of hurricanes, torna-does, flood and fire. What's on the burn pile? Materials and utterances from 21st century American homes.

Within the pile, surfaces that read initially as wood veneer resolve into a densely inscribed thicket of swirling patterns and lettering. Objects themselves fool the eye. Lengths of scrap wood, demolished staircase parts and lighting strips turn out to have been fabricated from papier-mache and other materials, as do the picture frames and serving platters. Every object is doubly loaded: firstly, with inscribed text and also with swirling patterns reminiscent of (but not identical to) wood grain. This swirling-pattern language, the artist has said, connotes the principle of flow.

The texts that appear illuminated in the installation's LED channels and inscribed on its surfaces are remixed compilations of statements LoMele solicited from anonymous "truth donors" via the interactive installation "Confidence Booth," which the artist exhibited at shopping malls, thrift stores, flea markets and public parks in the Sierra Nevada mountains and San Joaquin Valley. Volunteers were invited to record true statements inside a private, soundproof booth styled to look like a cozy living room. "I wanted it to look like grandma's house," the artist recalled. Then, a randomization algorithm scrambled the truths that have been harvested. The resultant hybrid utterances, machine-derived cut-ups have been divorced from obvious meaning. Resisting interpretation, they retain ghostly traces of intent, as well as a degree of structural and historic specificity — they're voiced in the past tense like remembered dreams, studded with Californian place names and proper nouns that gesture obliquely toward national headlines of the recent past. A papier-mache salver reads, in part: "It was Fresno. It was daylight. It was Epstein. It was him daylight possibility Cousteau. It was Fargo-to-Seven-Brother." Another piece is inscribed with the lines: "This is not the horror of this year's arrow/ one day flying through the epidemic in the shadows." You wouldn't mistake these fragments for truths universally acknowledged. Even so, a weird truth-y quality clings to them.

LoMele's approach recalls the stylings of Komar and Melamid, the post-Soviet conceptualists whose signature project remains their 1990s series People's Choice. In these works, the duo created nations' "most wanted" and "least wanted" paintings based on the results of surveys conducted by professional polling companies. The generally acknowledged aesthetic failure is the project's punchline, while gesturing at the inadequate binary nature of Cold War thought. In the same way, remixing volunteers' personal truths into authorless new configurations yields serendipitous vibes, even as it fails to generate veritas.

"Truth is like a thrashing-machine," Herman Melville observed in The Confidence-Man, "tender sensibilities must keep out of the way." On one level, "Burn Pile" telegraphs the difficulty of finding common ground in an era in which every truth is construed to be "personal," where post-truth politics and tender sensibilities hold sway. But LoMele's installation is not all Babel and nihilism. The artist states in a video narration that he aspires "to show respect for an ambient sincerity, free of specificity," wondering: "Can the apprehension of a greater truth, unknowable, oblique, arise from this?" The artwork might function like a compass, redirecting our perception of truth to a sector located elsewhere, where logic does not apply. If crowd-sourced truth nuggets fail to congeal into sense, this might tip viewers off to the fact that their search for truth was itself flawed — the question incorrectly framed. LoMele's sprawling project indulges our skepticism, while at the same time staking claim to the oxymoron hidden like a stiletto inside Bruce Nauman's neon catchphrase, "The True Artist Helps the World By Revealing Mystic Truths."

Burn Pile's claim to humanism is in its central insight: that truth is not the outcome of an equation's solution, or an essence to be distilled, but something essentially beyond us. This point hits different in the age of ChatGPT. The large language model neural networks and other artificial intelligence systems now beginning to shape our world are trained by trawling through billions of pages of text data indiscriminately scraped from the internet, employing a post-truth learning model that is alien to the human brain. Now that AI is casting horoscopes, writing state legislature housing bills, and designing weapons systems, will viewers laboring to wrap their heads around Burn Pile's koans conclude that the fault lies not in themselves, but in the algorithms?

Warm Shadows

By Collin Yeo

music@northcoastjournal.com

Object Heavy plays Cannifest on Saturday, Sept. 9.

Well, I made it through the long weekend without calamity, as I hope many, if not all, of you did as well. I took some of the time to throw a surprise birthday party for my youngest brother, whose birthday in August was overshadowed by a death in the family. I had never thrown a surprise party before, and there are a lot of moving pieces, nearly all of them human, an unreliable and unpredictable species at best. Happily, I had help from his friends and my own, and the crowd we pulled worked in harmony to make sure that we didn't fuck up the one thing that you absolutely cannot fuck up regarding this kind of thing. You know, the surprise. Much thanks to everyone who was a part of that, you know who you are.

We are in what I think of as the Warm Shadows era of summer, where the heat is tinged with encroaching night and every living thing casts ever-longer shadows that will soon snuff out their summer blooms. I love that feeling, native in these regions to the beautiful month of September. Let's all go out and taste a bit of it, eh?

Thursday

Fans of goth, post-punk, darkwave and the more experimental side of sonic heaviness have some good news coming their way this evening at 7 p.m. The Siren's Song Tavern is putting on a show with exactly that kind of crew, headlined by Atlanta's Dead Register with Oakland to Arcata transplants Silence in the Snow, as well as local DJs DastBunny and Unseelie ($15).

Friday

Arcata has two groovy shows tonight at 9 p.m. for you to choose from, a choice that might prove difficult, as both look quite promising. Over at Humbrews, Fernstock 2023 alumni Caribbean Jazz Odyssey is set to share the stage with Samba Floresta, which guarantees a night of movement on the dancefloor ($10). Meanwhile at the Miniplex, there's a hip hop mini-fest of sorts, where under the title Live Wires, lots of talent will be on deck to perform, including Fresh Micks, 4drian, Emani, Rowdy, local heroes Reeph and Soul, and, hailing from Redding, Davey Legend. Only $5 for this full crew.

Saturday

It's the beginning of the two-day smokestravaganza Cannifest at the lovely Halvorsen Park. Since there's a lot going on here, I'm just going to share a few basic details and leave it to you to work out the rest. Today's fest goes from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m., while Sunday begins an hour later and ends at the same time. There are a lot of non-musical aspects to this whole thing that fall far outside of my beat but also quite a few musical acts that will be doing their thing on the four stages. So, rather than getting lost in the weeds regarding the technical stuff, I will instead say were I to go and had to pick only one day, I would go today, as legendary hip hop duo Dead Prez headlines the entertainment, and on a long list of formidable talent, local funk masters Object Heavy will also be plying its wares. Ticket pricing runs through a range of number and options, with single day advance passes going for $55, weekend passes starting at $82, and VIP weekend lanyards running you an oddly specific amount of $182.42. Enjoy!

Sunday

If you aren't out among the merry crowds and THC clouds on the Eureka waterfront today, I'm going to recommend a little mirthful brilliance from my childhood that's playing at the Arcata Theatre Lounge today at 6 p.m. I am, of course, talking about one of Tim Burton's best films and the only one starring the recently departed Paul Reubens: Pee Wee's Big Adventure. There are few films as perfect and one-of-a-kind as this one, just as there was, and will only ever be one Pee Wee Herman and his brilliant creator. In a world absolutely teeming with rich, thieving assholes like Francis Buxton, it feels right to take a break and root for the hero in the gray suit and bowtie. Entrance costs $8, $12 with a poster, which is often designed by a local artist. Viva Pee Wee.

Monday

Metal Monday at Savage Henry Comedy Club rolls on! This week's offering features Bay Area "brutal slam" band Lost to the Void, along with local warlords Malicious Algorithm and Sarcophilus Satanicus. Come get some, because this line-up is no joke and this will be a sick one. As usual, music starts at 7 p.m. in deference to the workers out there and the cover charge is a reasonable $5-$10. Be sure to bring an I.D. if you intend to drink a heavy bevvie.

Tuesday

Not much going on in the nightlife tonight beyond some recurring gigs I have highlighted before, so I will instead take a moment to note the 20th anniversary of the passing of one of the greatest American musicians and songwriters to ever strap on a guitar, step up to the microphone and introduce himself in one of the finest baritones known to humanity. I am talking about the Man in Black himself, Mr. Johnny Cash. I'm sure I speak for plenty out there when I say that we miss you, boss, and hope that wherever you are now, you can feel our eternal love and gratitude.

Wednesday

Two movie nights in a week? Sure, but I have a very compelling case for this one. La Planete Sauvage or, to English-speaking audiences, The Fantastic Planet is a 1973 dystopic animated science fiction flick that uses its alien subjects to underscore some of the less pleasant aspects of our own species' behaviors. But ignoring the plot, my main attraction to the film is that it contains one of the greatest soundtracks of all time, scored by French jazz great Alain Goraguer, who passed away in February of this year. It's a genius work of psychedelic jazz and rock that even sounds circus-like at times, with abstract, sighing vocalese meeting deeply effected electric guitar for a fantastic result. I've listened to it countless times. Check out the track "Les Fusées" for an excellent example of its general vibe. Anyway, the Arcata Theatre Lounge is the spot, the feature starts at 7:45 p.m., and $5 ($9 if you want a poster) is the price. ●

Collin Yeo (he/him) is an earthling and would like to remain so for the rest of his lifespan. He lives in Arcata, which is, happily, located on Earth.

Back in the Fight

Mother's Day and Equalizer 3

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

MOTHER'S DAY. In my zeal for streaming action movies out of Asia, I may have slept on Poland. The first five minutes of Mateusz Rakowicz's Dzien Matki, as it's called pre-translation, set the tone, with the exhausted, rained upon Nina Nowak (Agnieszka Grochowska) taking on a seven-pack of right-wing corner thugs with a six-pack of beer. (Pro-tip: Don't call a woman with a bag of cans and a 1,000-yard stare "babushka.") It's an ugly fight, like most in the hour-and-a-half, hardcore woman-on-a-mission actioner. It's also interestingly shot, gritty, occasionally funny, innovatively choreographed and driven both by Grochowska's physicality and grim, troubled presence.

In Warsaw, Poland, Nina, an ex-NATO special operative, lives alone in a spare apartment. Her only apparent human contact comes in the form of strangers' fists or meeting up with her rumpled, old colleague Igor (Dariusz Chojnacki), who is the only one who knew her before she was declared dead and assumed a new identity. She does, however, do a little social media stalking of her teenage son Max (Adrian Delikta), whom she gave up when she went underground. Max is thriving in the care of his adoptive parents until he's grabbed by a crew of gangsters in ski masks. With Igor as her inside man, Nina learns the kidnapping is an act of revenge/blackmail by her old enemies. And so she comes out of hiding and works her way up the organized crime chain of command, fight by brutal fight, to find the people holding her son.

The plot serves up a series of skin-headed bad guys, one of whom keeps his father's head in a jar. Nina goes to the mat, or rather concrete, with each one in energetically choreographed set pieces. In a kitchen fight, she two-fists it with a paring knife and a frying pan, at one point deploying an exploding bag of flour for cover. There are graphic and goofy stunts with corkscrews and hammers, and the camera work and editing allow us to track the action. In every slug and slice, Grochowska shows us what it costs Nina in effort and pain in a way that big (literally and figuratively) action stars like Dwayne Johnson never do. Her small, middle-aged body is knocked around, sometimes dragged and tossed across floors and tables, and she struggles to get back on her feet, not always successfully. It's both exhausting and exhilarating to see her emerge, stumbling toward the next round.

I am, as I've said before, a sucker for an estranged mother heroine — hell, I even enjoyed JLo's manicured action turn in The Mother. And while Mother's Day could have coasted on the estranged son plot as the impetus for all the bloody work to come, Grochowska's sad, darkened eyes and animal stillness add more depth and emotional weight than expected. And when she gasps out a sudden sob before quickly stifling it, the moment hits hard. 94M. NETFLIX.

THE EQUALIZER 3. Years ago, I decided I was done watching Denzel Washington suffer. No more roaming apocalyptic wastelands or noble deaths. The Equalizer (2014) wasn't a return to the comparatively carefree roles of his youth, but in Antoine Fuqua's action reboot of the old TV show, he was doing all right. As retired intelligence operative Robert McCall, he dispensed stop-watch-timed smackdowns and executions in the first two films to help/avenge the helpless, sharing friendly chats and fatherly wisdom as he went. But this supposed final sequel takes a darker approach in theme and style that makes me think I've slipped in my resolution.

After dispatching a small army of henchmen whose shot, stabbed and cleaver-hacked bodies litter a mansion on a Sicilian vineyard, McCall doesn't quite make his escape. A local cop (Eugenio Mastrandrea) finds him and spirits him to a kindly doctor (Remo Girone) in the idyllic seaside village of Altamonte. There, he recovers with the help of the doctor, good-natured townsfolk and a rehab regimen of Italian food and stair climbing. Once he's back in fighting shape, he means to leave town, but the same Camorra/mafia that was connected to the operation in the vineyard have shown up to terrorize the residents of Altamonte. McCall sets his watch and goes to work defending the town and taking down the mobsters, all under a watchful but slightly behind CIA agent (Dakota Fanning).

Equalizer 3 swings between the beauty of the Amalfi coast and the visceral ugliness of violence. (And yes, it's the Italian mob, so there is the requisite scene of slick-haired henchmen eating spaghetti in a kitchen with prosciutto legs and cheeses strung up overhead.) There's more editing and shooting around action sequences — no shade on the 68-year-old Washington — and more screentime goes to the grisly consequences. Blood reads almost black in shots of gruesome death, and heroes and villains alike suffer in spittle-dripping, closeup agony. Upon his waking, the doctor asks McCall if he has saved a good man, to which McCall replies he doesn't know. And while he wrestles with guilt from his sick bed, he jumps back into the work of killing with more than the precision of the previous films — a glowering McCall holds eye contact with one man sliding down to his death in the street, taunting another as he crawls away. By the time he saves the town and all its good people, as we know he will, we're no longer sure he should be among them. R. 109M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK. ●

PROPERTY TAX DEFAULT (DELINQUENT) LIST

I, Amy Christensen, Humboldt County Tax Collector, State of California, certify that:
The real properties listed below were declared to be in tax default at 12:01 a.m. on July 1, 2020, by operation of law pursuant to Revenue and Taxation Code §3436. The declaration of default was due to nonpayment of the total amount due for the taxes, assessments, and other charges levied in fiscal year 2019-2020 that were a lien on the listed real property.
Tax-defaulted real property may be redeemed by payment of all unpaid taxes and assessments, together with the additional penalties and fees, as prescribed by law, or it may be redeemed under an installment plan of redemption. The amount to redeem, including all penalties and fees, as of September 2023, is shown opposite the parcel number and next to the name of the assessee.
All information concerning redemption of tax-defaulted property will be furnished, upon request, by Amy Christensen 825 5th St Room 125 Eureka, CA 95501. (707)476-2450.

PARCEL NUMBERING SYSTEM EXPLANATION

The Assessor's Parcel Number (APN), when used to describe property in this list, refers to the assessor's map book, the map page, the block on the map (if applicable), and the individual parcel on the map page or in the block. The assessor's maps and further explanation of the parcel numbering system are available in the assessor's office.

PROPERTY TAX DEFAULTED ON JULY 1, 2020, FOR THE TAXES, ASSESSMENTS AND OTHER CHARGES FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 2019-2020.

AMENDED
NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF
TY MICHAEL MACDONALD
CASE NO. PR230266

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, of TY MICHAEL MACDONALD A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner SHEL M BARSANTI The petition for probate requests that SHEL M BARSANTI be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent. THE PETITION requests the decedent's will and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate. The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by court.

A HEARING on the petition will be held on September 28, 2023 at 1:31 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: #4

For information on how to appear remotely for your hearing, please visit <https://www.humboldt.courts.ca.gov/>

IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney. IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law. YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk. REQUEST FOR PROPOSALS

HOOPA VALLEY TRIBAL EDUCATION DEPARTMENT "THE NEW K-12 EDUCATION BUILDING" "PROJECT & CONSTRUCTION MANAGER"

The Hoopa Valley Tribe (HVT) is requesting proposals (RFP) from responsible and responsive qualified individuals, organizations, or companies for the "Project & Construction Manager" position for a new 6,600 square foot education building, site work and utilities, known as the "New K-12 Education Building Project." With a contract estimated performance period of the date of contract approval by the Hoopa Valley Tribe (HVT) to the targeted Project completion end date of 3 years.

Project Proposal Packets, "Request for Proposals - Comprehensive," may be obtained by contacting the Hoopa Valley Tribe's Planning Department at hvtplanner@gmail.com after Tuesday, September 5, 2023.

PROPOSAL DEADLINE: Monday, September 25, 2023, 5:00 p.m.

The proposals submitted in response to the RFP will be used as a basis for selecting the "Project & Construction Manager" consultant for this project. The Consultant's proposal will be evaluated and ranked according to the criteria provided in Appendix B, "Evaluation Criteria," of the "RFP - Comprehensive."

Addenda to this RFP, if issued, will be sent to all prospective Consultants the Hoopa Valley Tribe's Planning Department has specifically e-mailed or mailed a copy of the "RFP Comprehensive" to, and are placed on the Project's "Plan Holder's List." It shall be the Consultant's responsibility to check and obtain any Addenda that may be issued.

Proposals shall be submitted by email to the following:

Onaleece Colegrove: hoopa.ed.director@gmail.com

Cc: hvtplanner@gmail.com

Proposers shall also submit two (2) hard copies and one (1) electronic copy in PDF format on a USB Drive of the Consultant's Proposal. The (2) hard copies and (1) USB Drive shall be mailed/stamped prior to or on the Monday, September 25, 2023, 5:00 p.m. deadline.

Proposals shall be submitted in a sealed package clearly marked "Hoopa Valley Tribal Education Department," "New K-12 Education Building Project," "Project & Construction Manager Proposal" "Do Not Open," and shall be addressed as follows:

Onaleece Colegrove, Director
Hoopa Valley Tribal Education Department
P.O. Box 1348
11860 State Highway 96
Hoopa, CA 95546
(530) 625-4413 x29

Proposals received after the times and dates specified above will be considered nonresponsive and will be returned to the Consultant.

Any proposals received prior to the time and date specified above may be withdrawn or modified by an emailed written request of the Consultant. To be accepted and considered, however, the modified Proposal must be returned and received prior to the September 25, 2023, 5:00 p.m. deadline.

Unsigned proposals or proposals signed by an individual not authorized to bind the prospective Consultant will be considered nonresponsive and rejected.

This RFP does not commit the Hoopa Valley Tribe to award a contract, to pay any costs incurred in the preparation of a proposal for this request, or to procure or contract for services. The Hoopa Valley Tribe reserves the right to accept or reject any or all proposals received as a result of this request, to negotiate with any qualified Consultant, or to modify or cancel in part or in its entirety the RFP if it is in the best interests of the Hoopa Valley Tribe to do so. Furthermore, a contract award may not be made based solely on price.

The prospective Consultant is advised that should this RFP result in recommendation for award of a contract, the contract will not be in force until it is approved and fully executed by the Hoopa Valley Tribe.

All products used or developed in the execution of any contract resulting from this RFP will remain in the public domain at the completion of the contract.

The anticipated consultant-selection timeline schedule is as follows:

- Proposal Deadline:
Monday September 25, 2023, 5:00 p.m.
- Proposal Review & Evaluations:
Tuesday, September 26, 2023
- Oral Interviews:
Thursday, September 28, 2023
- Contract Negotiation with first-ranked consultant:
Friday, September 29, 2023
- Contract Award & Notice to Proceed:
Friday, October 6, 2023

Any questions related to this RFP shall be submitted to the attention of Pamela Mattz, Planner II, via email at hvtplanner@gmail.com. Questions shall be submitted before Friday, September 22, 2023, at 5:00 PM. in order to address the questions in a timely manner. No oral questions or inquiries about this RFP shall be accepted.

Indian Preference, Section 7(b) of the Indian Self-Determination & Education Assistance Act (25 USC 450e(b)), and the Hoopa Valley Tribe's TERO Ordinance, as amended, will be enforced. Contractor and employees shall be subject to the Drug and Alcohol Policies Ordinance, Title 21 of the Hoopa Valley Tribal Code.

Eureka
SYMPHONY
FOR ANOTHER REMARKABLE SEASON
OF LIVE SYMPHONIC MUSIC

FROM CAROL JACOBSON, EUREKA SYMPHONY MUSIC DIRECTOR/CONDUCTOR

Dear Music Lovers,

So delighted to welcome everyone to the 32nd season of the Eureka Symphony. This season you will once again be able to discover the excitement and magic of the live symphonic experience. If you have not yet had the good fortune to encounter this thrill, now is the time to join us. Together we'll explore some great music played by this wonderful orchestra, both old favorites and works completely new to your ears. We have several fabulous soloists to inspire you this year as well as the local Young Artist Showcase winner. So much to enjoy, let us share it with you.

I look forward to seeing you at the Symphony!

Across the Centuries

October 6 & 7, 2023

Sponsored by KEET-TV

The Eureka Symphony season begins with a musical journey across nine centuries. George Frideric Handel's Water Music Suite #2, composed in 1717 for a royal jaunt on the Thames, is followed by Rainbow Body, by Christopher Theofanidis, which transports a melody by the 12th century mystic composer Hildegard of Bingen to the 21st century. The evening closes with Danish composer Niels Gade's Symphony No. 3 in A minor, Opus 14. Gade's fame was one of the preeminent musicians of the 19th century during what is known as the Danish Golden Age.

A Joyous Celebration

December 1 & 2, 2023

Sponsored by Redwood Legacy Group at Morgan Stanley

Celebrate the holidays with music of our community's traditions. The orchestra opens the concert with Gwyneth Walker's Symphony of Grace, then is joined by mezzo-soprano Molly Mary Mahoney and tenor David Powell. Beginning with Comfort Ye and Every Valley from Handel's Messiah and followed by A Hanukkah Medley, and An English Christmas. The celebration concludes with holiday classics by Mel Tormé and Irving Berlin.

Let the Drama Begin

March 1 & 2, 2024

Sponsored by Coldwell Banker Sellers Realty

There is no more dramatic opening to a concert than Beethoven's Egmont Overture, highlighting Beethoven's admiration the figure of the Dutch Count of Egmont and his dramatic stand against oppression. The overture is followed by Mozart's majestic 35th symphony, known as the Haffner. The evening ends with Tchaikovsky's stunning Piano Concerto No. 1 in B ♭ minor, Op. 23, performed by the brilliant pianist Alexander Tutunov.

Distinctive Voices

April 12 & 13, 2024

Sponsored by McCrea Motors

Discover the sounds of Andalusia with España, Rhapsody for Orchestra by the 19th century French composer Emmanuel Chabrier, then cheer for a concerto played by the winner of the Eureka Symphony's Young Artist Showcase. The concert concludes with William Grant Still's Symphony No. 2 in G minor (Song of a New Race). Contrasting this work with his first symphony, the Afro-American, Still said its expansive harmonies show the world "a totally new individual."

A Study in Contrasts

May 31 & June 1, 2024

Sponsored by Coast Central Credit Union

The season finale opens with Dmitri Shostakovich's Violin Concerto No. 2 in C-sharp minor, Op. 129, played by the Eureka Symphony's incomparable concertmaster, Terrie Baune. His final concerto, Shostakovich's work is wry, complex and fascinating. The season concludes with Antonín Dvořák's Symphony No. 9 in E minor, Op. 95 (From the New World). Written in Spillville, Iowa and premiered in New York in 1893, the New World Symphony is a beloved celebration of Dvořák's time in America.
